The Lion Guard Story

The deep trees of the Forest of Memory were dark and out of the way, a place of calm and quiet but to those of the outside, it could seem to be a place left undefended, helpless and alone.

Yet it was not so.

Many had long kept their eyes on the edge of the forest, and one of those was Artulio. Artulio prowled the edge of the trees and kept his eyes out for trouble. He walked the route every day in one long circle.

It had been easy at first, in his younger years Artulio had taken the entire circumference of the forest in half a day and would spend the rest of the day working on hunting or even speak with the other animals of the forest.

However, age began to take its toll on Artulio, the years rolled on and it became harder and harder to keep the edge of the forest safe. It began to take longer and longer for him to make his way on patrol which left him less time to hunt for himself, to speak with the ones he protected. His aged bones ached and creaked as he made his way around the edge of the trees, the sun rising in the East and setting in the West before he could even make it to the half-way point. Into the night Artulio marched on, forever trying to keep his community safe.

However, the holes in his patrol were evident and led to more and more infiltrations, more and more hunters entering the forest and more and more predators. Homes were raided, nests were pillaged and many creatures fell to fang, claw, sword and arrow.

Trust fell and the animals of the forest had to look elsewhere for protection. The old Artulio was not up to the task; even with such determination and work under his belt, there had to be a new defender of the trees of Memory.

There were whispers on the wind of a new protector, the Guard had been protecting many other forests and communities, the Lion Guard had many defenders and when the forest reached out for help, Aman reached out to them.

The great Lion entered the forest and approached Artulio. His booming voice gentle yet firm, aged with wisdom but still in its prime. "Dear friend, you have protected this land for many a winter. You have stepped up to the task of holding the line, of walking the edge of this dear community day and night. You have done honour to your pride." Stepping closer to the aged beast, Aman sat beside him.

"Let us take the mantle of your work, we are not here to replace you, we are here to make the task easier." Looking out at the Lion Guard entering the tree line, they carried strange magics with them; staffs of light, walls of metal and glowing eyes of yonder.

"You will protect them?" Artulio asked quietly, his aged voice weary with time.

"I will." Aman nodded before looking to his Pride. "We will." He nodded again and laid down beside the aged Artulio. "We all will."
